Delayed Election Returns.

Never in the history of the country has there been such delay in the collection of the official returns of a presidential election, that is, never since modern methods have come into vogue. Although nearly a month has passed, there are six missing returns in San Francisco, where the vote is so close that the missing returns may change the result in the State. In Wyoming matters seem to be very much mixed. and in Onio, which is gridironed with railways and cobwebbed with telegraph lines, the returns are just in, while North Dakota is still in doubt. The official vote of New York city is just announced, and New Jersey has only this week finished the official computation. Several other States are behind owing to innumerable delays, recount and contests due to the new ballot law. The fact is the electoral system is cumbersome and ought to be changed.
